Suitable for All those seeking to improve the quality of their feedback in clinical training and education, and clinical supervision and/or all those involved in the design and delivery of simulation based education and training
The workshop is suitable for beginner to intermediate practitioners

Prerequisites Nil

Location HNE Simulation Centre, John Hunter Hospital Campus

Aim

To introduce participants to a conversational framework that can be applied to challenging conversations that occur in their practice as clinical educators, supervisors and leaders

Outline

Feedback is a vital component of education but is often considered the most challenging aspect of our work as educators or supervisors. This interactive course will explore and provide strategies to deal with challenging conversations by presenting a structure for feedback and debriefing based on the work of the Institute for Medical Simulation in Boston.

Using a series of simulations, facilitated debriefings, video triggers and group exercises we will:

- Learn how to create a safe environment for feedback conversations
- Learn and practice a conversational technique that helps drive deeper learning
- Practice giving feedback and experience the impact of receiving it

Participants will work in small, facilitated groups to apply strategies for feedback, followed by feedback on the 'feedback'.
